Approved For Release 2009/09/04: CIA-RDP87M00539R002404050002-2 Executive Registry Central Intelligence 2940/1 Washington, D.C. 20 6 November 1985 Executive Director NOTE FOR: Your Creative Problem Solving Idea SUBJECT First, my apologies for not getting back to you sooner. Your idea for a central clearing house for distributing information about present and perceived future problems is imaginative. But I believe that the best solution to problems generally originate with people who are already familiar with the issues at hand and who have some vested or intellectual interest in solving them. It was with this in mind that a year ago we invited employees to share their ideas on specific problems with Agency top level management. I fear that doing the reverse as you suggest -- have top level management disseminate all the problems to the Agency population in general and then try to manage an influx of informed and uninformed suggestions -- would be chaotic. As you pointed out in your memo, there are also security considerations to take into account. We do appreciate your taking the time to give us your thoughts, but your proposal, if we understand it correctly, doesn't convince us that it would result in a net improvement. Thanks for taking the time to express your concern.
